Faculty Exchange Program

Organized by Department of History Barbhag College and Mahendra Narayan Choudhury Balika Mahavidyalaya, Nalbari

Date: 02/11/2017

Venue: MNC College

Department of History of Barbhag College, Kalag, Nalbari, conducted a Faculty Exchange Program, for the 5th semester student in the History Department MNC College Nalbari. For the Exchange program, Namita Devi, HOD, History Barbhag College, as a Resource Person conducted one hour class for the students of 5th semester MNC College. The class started at around 2pm. The focus of the lecture was on “Commercialization of Agriculture in Colonial India”. The lecture session covered the topic of commercialization of agriculture during British Rule, its negative and positive impact in Indian Society. She lectured on how the various economic policies of British led to the rapid transformation of India’s economy into a colonial economy whose nature and structure were determined by the needs of the British economy. She then goes on to explain that when industrial revolution was gaining its pace in England, commercialization of agriculture started in India. It became prominent in an around 1860. The main aim of such policies was not to feed the industries of India but was done primarily to feed the British Industries. She says that every policy have a positive and negative effects. She highlighted the negative impact of commercialization of agriculture such as exploitation of poor as the poor peasant was forced to sell his produce just after harvest at whatever price he could get as he had to meet the demands of government moneylenders and his family requirement. It also led to loss of land if the peasant failed to meet the demand the land came under the ownership of money lender. Some of the positive impact of commercialization of agriculture was that the commercialization linked India with the world economy, it led to the introduction of large number of commercial crops such as tea, indigo, cotton, coffee. She concluded the lecture by saying that the commercialization of agriculture was a new phenomenon in Indian society introduced by British from which the upper section of the Indian society was benefitted and the peasant life was tied to remote international market. The worst effect of commercialization was the oppression of peasants at the hands of Europeans and rich moneylenders. The one hour session came to an end at around 3pm with more new knowledge for the students.
